UNITED STATES TO BECOME BONE DRY FIRST OF NEXT JULY

Compromise Arrived at in the to have repeated here the unfortunate

Special to The Christian Science Monitor from its Washington Bureau

Senate on Monday, the United States pledge: will be bone dry on the 1st of July, 1919. This has been now finally and definitely determined, and no matter the United States of America, and do what influences are brought to bear solemnly promise to support the United on the situation, or what efforts are I pledge myself to observe all govern made by the liquor interests and politicians affiliated with those interests nature and to the extent of my ability, no further concessions as to the time and to support the government loans imit will be made by the supporters as well as the agencies of relief and of war prohibition.

As provided in the Food Stimulation Bill, which is to come up on Wednesday morning as soon as the urgent Man-Power Bill is disposed of, the Jones amendment fixed Jan. 1, 1919, as the date when the nation bone-dry law would become effective. The President, however, intervened, not to oppose war prohibition, but to ask for an extension of the time limit, in order to give the liquor interests time to settle and adjust their affairs, and to prevent a disturbance to financial litions that might result from loss to those banks which hold large unts of whisky paper.

On Saturday afternoon the President had a conference with Senator Sheppard of Texas, who is a strong Administration Democrat and also one of the strongest advocates of wartime prohibition. It is understood that at this conference the President approved of the pending amendment but insisted that it is the wiser policy to give a longer respite to the liquor interests and the financial institutions connected with them. The President recommended that the time limit be extended to Jan. 1, 1920, thus giving he liquor men a year's respite longer the views held by the President, and agreed to make July 1 the time limit opportune for the organization of equipment, munitions and implements rather than Jan. 1 as contemplated in the pending amendment. Beyond this they refused to go. They adhere to the belief that it is totally unnecessary to extend the limit further, inich as the liquor men have nine asmuch as the liquor men have nine months' grace in which to settle their of several political parties. Although the submarine menace still remains, and is not to be disregarded, one could not fail to notice the marked improvement in conditions as compared with those of 18 months ago. There is a steady and increasing confidence that the danger is being effectively met, not only by methods employed from the first, but by new devices and appliances which have proved remarkably successful. Meantime whilst there is no let up at all in the bombing of the Rhine Valley and the German bases, the allied fliers have appeared so far afield as Constantinople, over which two hostile squadrons dropped bombs on Wednesday night. It is news which is not likely to add to the cheerfulness from the loquaciousness of the Gerof news of allied success is exerting a tremendously demoralizing effect in the ranks. One prisoner, taken by the Americans, declared that he knew of a division of 15,000 men which had been reduced in the recent fighting to 1000. This means that even allowing for the extraordinary exaggeration which is common to most people in speaking of numbers, the German casualties must have been terribly severe. What, however, struck this particular prisoner as most dangerous was the temper of the people in the munition factories, who had to be held there under an even more iron discipline than that which prevails at the front.

As an instance of the seriousness of the situation, the news that the Germans have used 50 divisions in trying to stem the English attack, which developed on the 8th of August, and that three new divisions, which have just been put in, have been identified, is perhaps more illuminating than anything else could be. It means that von Ludendorff is being forced to use up his reserves at a tremendous rate, and that therefore by the time the huge American army, now forming in France, gets under way, the Allies will only have attenuated battalions to face. How, when this day comes, the Germans will ever succeed in holding the vast line from the North Sea to Switzerland, it is impossible to say, and it is therefore, probably, against this day that they are intrenching the line of the Meuse, as a prelude to shortening the enormously long lines in France and Flanders.

A little later on the troops on the north side of the ver reached and occupied the outkirts of Rouex, just five miles west of Arrae, simultaneously with the first line defences of Gavrelle. Thus the "pillar" of Arras, which defied the full force of the great von Hindenburg under the brilliant defense of Sir Julian Byng, has been made even more secure, whilst the positions in front of it are becoming more and more insecure. Still further south Sir Douglas

Issues a Pamphlet Affording Remarkable Details as to Canada's War Effort

Special to The Christian Science Moniton from its Canadian Bureau

OTTAWA, Ont .- The part that Canada has played in the great war is told in illuminating and conscientious manner between the covers of a pamphlet, "Canada's War Effort, 1914-1918," issued from the office of the Director of Public Information, of which Mr. M. E. Nichols is the head. When war was declared Canada had practically no army, whereas during the four years of the war she has raised 552,601 men, all of whom except some 25,000 entered by voluntary enlistment. Of this number, up to June last 383,523 had gone overseas and again of this number 150,000 are at the present time in France. 'The largest enlistment was ualties up to June 30, 1918, were only made the supreme sacrifice.

Honors have been valiantly won by over 1200 members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, including 30 bestowals of the V. C. It is of interest briefly to refer to the operations of and May of 1915 covered itself with imperishable glory at the second battle of Ypres, on which occasion poisoned gas was used against the Allies for the first time. Quoting from the pamphlet: "During the remainder of 1915, the division (the First Division) saw much service at various points in the Ypres salient. In the spring of communiqué of the Belgian Army, 1916, the army corps, at that time comprising the first, second and third divisions, was heavily engaged for unward of three months in the pulsed by infantry and artillery fire operations to the east and southeast of Ypres, at St. Eloi (3rd to 19th "English attacks, which extended as mude, Morcken and Langemarck. We far as north of the Scarpe, mainly were successful on the other hand, in 6th, 13th and 14th June). In Septemfought in the battle of the Somme, capture of Courcelette. In 1917 the Canadian corps bore a considerable part in the storming of Vimy Ridge (9th to 13th April); it was engaged in Arleux and Fresnoy (28th, 29th April and 3d May); it was active and effective in the operations around Lens in June; and again on 15th August on Hill 70; and it fought with notable success from 25th October to 10th November at Passchendaele in the Flan ders offensive, sometimes termed the Third Battle of Ypres, In 1918 the Canadian cavalry brigade won dis-tinction in the German offensive of March and April." Whilst the Canadian force has been chiefly on the western front certain units have done their duty in Palestine and Macedonia. The story of the magnificent work performed by the troops has yet to be told. Of the expeditionary force 12,000 remain in Canada for home defense, and she also has supplied a garrison for St. Lucia, W. I. The Canadian Navy, although small in number has done admirable work n patrolling the Atlantic Coast and it s pointed out that two submarines operating off the west coast were able n the early days of the war to assist in keeping off Admiral von Spee's squadron from the Canadian ports on the Pacific Coast. Over 2000 Canadians are serving the Imperial naval forces in European waters. The bill for stores for naval purposes is eloquent of the activities of the Canadian naval service; in 1915-16 the quantity of stores purchased amounted to $2, 500,000, in the following year to $7, 500,000, and last year to $10,000,000. Reference is made to the fact that since the war gold coin and gold bullion to the value of $1,300,000 have been received at Ottawa by the Department of Finance as trustees for the Imperial Government and the Bank of England.

The pamphlet also deals with Canada's accomplishment during the last four years in the direction of the production of munitions which was recently referred to in The Christian Science Monitor, but it might be mentioned that the actual amount of cash disbursments up to date under this heading is over a billion dollars. The statistics of what Canadian women have done during the war have been but indifferently kept and it is safe to say that the half will never be told. In addition to those engaged in nursing and similar occupations of mercy, 30,000 have been engaged in munition factories whilst large numbers are at present doing their bit by working on farms.

NEW FURS

We made preparations many months ago for the opening of the fur season, taking unusual care in selecting the furs and in making sure that the workmanship was the best. If we had delayed until this time we should have had difficulty in getting the qualities you want and the prices would necessarily have been much higher. This is not a season when it is wise to talk much about comparative values or competitive values. We content ourselves with the statement that the qualities are guaranteed; that the workmanship and styles are of the best and with the assurance that when these two points are taken into account you will find our prices meet with your approval.

PROGRESS OF THE MAN-POWER BILL

By Unanimous Consent Agree- tria the twin operation of annexation as Passed by House

Special to The Christian Science Monitor from its Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D. C .- Under a unanimous consent agreement arrived at late on Monday, the Senate will at 4 o'clock on Tuesday proceed to vote on the Man-Power Bill extending the draft ages and designed to enable the United States to put 80 divisions, equivalent to 4,000,000 men, in the field by June 30, 1919.

In order to expedite the procedure the Senate committee on Monday substituted the Man-Power Bill, as passed by the House of Representatives, for the Senate measure, but in doing so dropped several unimportant amendnts adopted by the House. In adopting the House bill, the Senate Military Committee reasserted its support of the Reed-Thomas anti-strike amendment. This amendment is the most important change, next to the attempt ade by the House to alter the age limits so as to defer the calling of youths of 18 and 19 years of age.

The debate in the Senate on Monday was almost altogether confined to "work or fight" amendment, the indications being that this proviso will in some form be adopted. The adoption of this amendment by the Senate will mean that the conference committee on the bill will have to settle the differences between the Senate and the House in their respective attitude on the labor question. Monday's de-bate in the Senate clearly showed that there is no disposition in that body to permit any industrial slacking that might interfere with the prosecution

Senator Fall of New Mexico, who is one of the strongest advocates of registering the whole nation for military and industrial purposes, will offer an amendment on Tuesday providing Slovaks and of the Allies, who recogfor the registration of all men between 45 and 60 years of age, the aim ing to enable the government to sift and classify all the male populaor for industrial work.

The amendment of the Senator from New Mexico would authorize the President to give permits for industrial work and to revoke them at his and it is the Germans and Magyars we discretion. This proviso, however, is rather drastic and in all probability the Senate will vote it down.

Under the federal prohibition amendment, the country could not have bonedry prohibition before the end of former commander on the Russian March, 1920. Although it is expected and, in fact, certain that the federal amendment will be ratified by three- now and after the war. Essen says, have accepted commands fourths of the states by the end of next March, it takes one year after the ratification for the federal amendment for a permanent settlement of the drink to become effective, so that the effect of the passage of the pending prohibition measure is to give the country a bone-dry law nine months before the federal amendment would become effective. These nine months will probably coincide with the very time when the United States will require all its resources, all its man-power and all its moral force to prosecute the war to its conclusion.

The attitude of the President and the developments of Monday have quite disarmed the lobbyists of the liquor interests. It is no longer possible for them to hope that the op-position of the Administration, the predictions of Samuel Gompers or the well-meant apprehensions of Messrs Hurley and Colby can postpone the day of reckoning. They are now doing their best and indeed begging at their hardest that they be given a few months more of grace, but they were flatly told that they must reconcile themselves to the inevitable and set

Massachusetts Commissioner Says One Can Be Established by Advancing Retail Rates

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor BOSTON, Mass.-A demand that a maximum retail price for gasoline be fixed by the United States Government has followed the discovery that retailers generally throughout New England failed to observe the rule of the Federal Fuel Administration, forbidding an advance to the consumer of more than the one-half cent per gallon allowed wholesalers in July. It was found that the communication is evidently intended to be the official reply of the German Socialist Majority to the Inter-Allied Labor memorandum found that many retailers boosted on war aims, it is interesting to note their price a full cent a gallon, and has taken steps to correct the situa- and his colleagues had with Mr.

the Socialists of neutral countries, because only so can all appearance of partiality be avoided.

Now, your letter further expresses the wish that the Social-Democratic Party of Germany should publicly make a declaration as to its war aims The German party has already made such declarations several times. It has always subscribed through its spokesmen in the Reichstag and through public manifestoes, to a peace by agree-ment, which should be concluded with-out annexations and indemnities on the basis of the self-determination of peoples. The Stockholm delegation of the Social-Democratic Party of Germany defined in detail its attitude toward the peace question in the mem-orandum with which you are ac-quainted. The party Congress at Würzburg (held in August 1917) approved that memorandum. We have no reason to depart from the declarations made at Stockholm and com-municated to the public textually.

Finally, with regard to the attitude of the party toward the Eastern questions, you have doubtless, during the months that have passed since the dispatch of your letter, seen from the reports of the proceedings in the Federal Government—Dealers Party has stood up resolutely in this connection for its socialistic views.

Wishing you success in your efforts for the bringing about of an international socialist conference, we remain with Socialist greeting.

MR. HOLMAN AND PERTH CONFERENCE

Premier of New South Wales "Arrant Nonsense"

Special to The Christian Science Monitor from its Australasian Bureau SYDNEY, N. S. W .- "When I see plutions such as these, I begin to pair for the political future of my ntry," said Mr. W. A. Holman, Premier of New South Wales, and former leader of the Labor Party, referring to the peace resolutions of the Conference in Perth.

'The resolutions of the Perth Conrence," said Mr. Holman, speaking at the first annual conference of the National Association of New South Wales, "resolved themselves into three sitions: (1) Deploring the coninuance of the war; (2) an effort to effine the causes of the war; (3) an pt to propose methods by which the war may be drawn to a close.

With regard to the third proposition of the Perth Conference no doubt capitalism and a search for new marets has been responsible for many similar wars which have outraged humanity during the past fifty years, but to hint that the present war is in any ay due to the capitalistic system, or the outcome of capitalism, or that the litary menace which now broods over Europe cannot be ended without the complete overthrow of the capialistic system, is to blind oneself to obvious facts, and commit oneself to shibboleth which can only be aced candidly, in Callan Park Asylum. Is it conceivable that grown men -not children, not lunatics walking about in apparent possession of their sanity—should meet at Perth and solemnly suggest that Germany should now make peace by abolishing conscription, voluntarily evacuating all the territory she has occupied and dependents of all those who have perished in the course of the war? The proposal has only to be stated. It is neredible that such arrant nonsense ld be offered as a really serious ontribution toward the solution of the problem that faces us on every hand today.'

United States National Organization Proposes Assessment of 10 Cents a Month on Members

Special to The Christian Science Monitor from its Western Bureau

CHICAGO, Ill.-The American Socialist party is taking steps to automatically insure itself of an adequate campaign fund for the future, so that the national office may drop its appeals for donations to carry on campaigns. The plan proposed is an increase in dues of 10 cents a month on every party member, which will be for the merchant marine service being forwarded to national headquarters here in Chicago.

In commenting on the move, the lar income of the national organization and of every state organization. ships which at present have a total national organization to discontinue the practice of calling for a campaign fund and leave this field to the locals and states.

"It is essentially a war measure. It will provide the means of carrying on the work of the party under all conditions and result in the development of a real Socialist movement in America. Ten cents means little to each member. To the national and state organizations it represents a war chest that will open the way to the greatest campaign of organization, education and propaganda ever undertaken. It should receive the support of every member. It was talked over at the National Conference of State Secretaries and indorsed."

The proposal comes up as an amendment to the Socialist party constitution. It must be submitted to referendum. Probability is of course for its passage, but it is stated at national headquarters, its adoption will not take place, owing to the time required for initiation and referendum, intil after the congressional elections.

BUSINESS, FINANCE AND INVESTMENTS

CLOTH DEALINGS ARE RESTRICTED

General Business Held Back Because of Several Large Government Contracts for Mill Products Pending

Special to The Christian Science Monitor NEW BEDFORD, Mass.—The fact that there are several large govern-ment contracts for cloth of varying structions about to be given out to the mills was a factor in holding back general dealing in the primary cloth narkets during the last week. Business was especially dull in fine, ed yarn fabrics, such as are made in New Bedford, and though slightly tter in print cloth types, such as are nade in Fall River, was not active at any time. This was not the fault of the buyers, however, for there was a good demand in all lines throughout the week, but the mills have been unwilling to accept much more future business, practically every one of them being already sold two months ahead. Naturally the prospect of having even more of their machinery taken for war work has made them more reluctant to commit themselves to additional future contracts. The uncertainty over price fixing has largely been overcome, so far as the cloth mills are concerned, but the manufacturers have had time to figure out the probable effect of the present conditions, and they say that every-thing points to the wisdom of waiting until after Oct. 1 before taking any more business in quantity. They figure that the revision of prices at that time will probably take into consideration the increase in the price of raw cotton, and that they will be able to judge more accurately whether their labor costs are going to go up. and for goods, they are certain, will be just as strong then as it is today, and they will be just as much able to get the maximum prices allowed by the price-fixing committee as they are today.

From talk heard around the mill offices, it is evident that the small buyer, especially the one who is dissed to haggle at all over specifications or terms of payments or delivery, is having a very hard time indeed in the present market. He is fortunate indeed if he finds a mill willing to take his orders on any terms at all, especially if there is the slightest question about his credit, or his mptness in meeting his bills.

One manufacturer gave it as his opinion that the present conditions are almost certain to displace the small isalers from business, reasoning that there will not be enough cloth, by a considerable margin, to fill civilian re-quirements, and that the available supply will be absorbed almost en tirely by the large houses.

As a result of the announcement of the government prices on cotton yarn were very much higher than many had expected, a good many yarr buyers find themselves in a trying sition, due to their own overzealous ness to obtain the lowest possible In the interval just before the official list of yarn maximums was is sued, the buyers had been complaining that the mills were taking advantage of the shortage in the market to exac an excessively high price. Conse ently, they insisted upon having included in the bill of sale, on such viding that the price should be revised on the basis of the government figures. Now that the list is announced, most of them find that the levels set by the rice fixing committee are actually higher than the nominal prices a which their contracts were closed, the prices which they had been branding as excessive. The regulations issued along with the government prices provide that any contracts made between June 21 Oct. 1 shall have the prices revised according to the federal list, if the prices are in excess of the federal maximum. This rule is enforced whether there is any clause in the sale note providing for revision. Nothing is said, however, about prices that are below the government maximums, and these, consequently, remain unchanged. Thus, had the yarn buyers said nothing in the sale note about revision, they would have obtained the dvantage of the prices at which they had negotiated the purchase. The terms of the clause, however, made it necessary to revise the prices upward, instead of downward, as they had expected. Needless to say, the mills have been exacting in their demands, much to the chagrin of the yarn

Because of the high level at which the yarn prices were fixed, buyers have been hesitating to operate in the market, and have been confining their efforts, for the most part, during the last week, to a search for some mill that would agree to sell at less than the maximum prices allowed. Therefore, business has been limited to those cases where purchases were absolutely necessary because of the practical exhaustion of the stock on hand. Very few of the yarn users stocked up ahead previous to the issuance of the federal list of prices, for nearly all of them expected to be able to buy at lower prices after the anment. For that reason, an active business is expected just as soon as the yarn users accustom themselves to the new price levels.

Stocks moved in a rather spasmodic way on the New York and Boston exchanges on Monday. New high records for the movement were early established, and then there were quick recessions. Later there was another good advance. Prominent in the dealings was United States Steel, which was largely traded in at the higher price level. Deposits show an increase of $26,-535,055, and now reach a total of $311,-017,577, while notes in circulation increased from $29,206,034 to $31,196,636. The bank's figures for July, 1918, are $386,077,172, compared with June, 1918, $354,794,963, being an increase for the month of $31,262,209

FINANCIAL NOTES

Oklahoma and Kansas oil pipe line receipts were 11,842,230 barrels in July, a gain of 654,653 barrels over June. There has been a steady gain for the last five months over the corresponding months of previous years, and the 1918 production for the midcontinent field is expected to exceed that of 1917. It will be observed from the foregoing table, high grade bonds, legal for investment by savings banks, show the largest decline for the last year with second grade rails next, while low-priced issues show the least loss on an average. Moreover, the first two grade rails show substantial loss on the year, while the average decline in low-priced issues is comparatively slight, being only 2.58 points.

LOCOMOTIVE CO. EARNINGS GAIN

NEW YORK, N. Y .- The annual report of the American Locomotive Company, to be published about the end of the month, is expected to show net earnings after charges but before federal and Canadian taxes of about $10,-125,000, compared with $9.506,999 in 1916-17 fiscal period. Taxes it is understood, were about $4,000,000 compared with $2,205,319 in the previous year reducing net profits for stock to approximately $6,125,000, compared with $7,201,680 in 1916-17.

For preferred dividends $1,750,000 was required, leaving net for the common stock, according to estimates, of approximately $4,375,000, or $17.50 a share, compared with $21.80 the year

Assuming the accuracy of these estimates, the concern has earned net for its common stock since the middle of 1915 of about $75.50 a share. Dividends paid from these earnings aggregate $9.75 a share, leaving a net of $65.75 a share carried to surplus. In other words, American Locomotive's present market price is equaled by additions to surplus in the last three

The service team comprises champions of local clubs and others from nearby cities, therefore pitted against strong array the local athletes had little chance, and were forced to stand by and see the sailors dominate and win by a score of 36 points. William Gordon, captain of the service team, started the Pelham Bay team on the scoring path by turning in the first naval victory in the mile run. George Dernell of the reserve station added two championships, emerging with his two 1917 titles intact. The Pelham Bay sailor won both the 220yard and 440-yard competitions, his time for the furlong being 23s., and for the quarter-mile, 52 2-5s.

He went to the front early and set a pace which forced his most formidable rivals to retire. Ft. Slocum, and Halpine, the Morningside A. C. runner. The Pelham Bay star won by about 10 yards in

The other Pelham Bay sailor to gain a title was A. Desch, formerly of the Paulist A. C., who was victorious in the 220-yard low hurdles, making five ndividual championships annexed by the Pelham boys.

Second honors in the point fight went to the Pastime Athletic Club with 21 points, while in order followed the Salem-Crescent Athletic Club with 14, Paulist Athletic Club 9, Bronx Church and Mohawk with 8 each, and the Princeton School of Military Aeronautics, through the efforts of G. A. Bronder Jr., 7. The latter athlete won the javelin throw with a cast of 164

While no championship records were smashed, due somewhat to the rather slow track, the finishes in every race were on the close order, while the fight for the titles were steady throughout. The absence of many champions of 1917 was noticeable, but many veterans, who have seen service in these games for many in these games for many years, were still out for titles. Among them was P. J. FOOTBALL GAMES

Would Resume Gridiron Relations With Dartmouth and Trinity Colleges

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass. - There promise to be a couple of important but 3 1-2 Games—League changes in the Williams College football schedule this fall, brought about by the fact that Rensselaer and Middlebury have canceled their annual gridiron meetings with the Purple. To replace these two opponents, steps are now under way to arrange games with Dartmouth, Brown or Trinity. Hopes for a Princeton game have been practically abandoned.

Football relations with Dartmouth College have been severed for several years. After competing annually for a decade, the two colleges failed to get together in 1914. Trinity also disappeared from the list of Purple opponents in all departments.

The remainder of the Williams schedule will be the same as last year as far as opponents are concerned. although there has been a shift in the Union game, which comes two weeks later than formerly. Williams meets Columbia at New York on Oct. 26.

They even asked themselves whether there was really skeptics now have their answer. In the two years that extension work has been in operation the classes have been attended by more than 7000 students and they would have been atended by a still larger number if the funds available had been large enough to allow the Board of Education to give free rein to its plans. For the most part the courses which had a direct relation to a definite trade naturally carried the strongest appeal, but it must not be forgotten that English was the subject which led all the others in popularity. If the extension system had done nothing more than give some thousands of our citizens would still have to be adjudged a success. It is an agency of Americanization and as such should be heartily supported.

Replying, Mr. Melville Stone said that America was slow in coming into the war, but he thought this was more than compensated for by the preparedness of the public thought. month.

Sir Robert Borden, in the course of his speech, emphasized the fact that the British Empire and America had undertaken this war absolutely free from any thought of aggression or material gain. They were in the war, he said, for a great common purpose 'Was it not possible," he asked, "to see that a mighty influence must be exercised, not only on the United States and the British Empire, but upon the whole world by the very fact that Great Britain and America are fighting side by side?"

Nations, Sir Robert Borden said no thinking man could say a word against t, except from the point of view of its practicability. But if there could not be a League of Nations, might it not be possible, he asked, for these two great commonwealths in the future to exercise upon the nations of the world such an influence as standing tribunal between the United States and Canada which had been in operation for 12 years, and the results of which showed what could be secured by methods of adjudica-tion between civilized nations. The Germans, Sir Robert declared, had taken a very bold step when they determined to force an issue with the United States. They had regarded the military position of the United States as negligible. Today they were learning that the power of the United States would, perhaps, be the most formidable factor they would have to reckon with before the close of the

THE ADRIATIC AND THE WAR

Special to The Christian Science Monitor ROME, Italy - "The Adriatic and the War" is the name of an article written by Admiral Del Bono, the Minister for the Navy, for the new review, La Rassegna Italiana, and pub-lished previously in the Giornale After descanting on the great changes which have come over naval warfare, with the extensive use of mines and submarines, Admiral Del Bono turns to the consideration of the special conditions prevailing in the Adriatic where these changes have naturally been felt in a high degree That sea, he says, is a unique one from the point of view of naval warfare. Anyone who has studied it from that aspect has known for a long time that war can only be carried on there with me support on the eastern coast and for this reason Italian naval writers, up till a short time ago, always proclaimed the necessity for obtaining at least a base of operations on the opposite coast, in view of the lack of natural or artificial resources on the Italian shore. The advent of the submarine, however, had put a veto upon theories assuming the possibility of satisfying the necessity or advocating an attempt at least to satisfy it by some sudden They have been driven, therefore, Admiral Del Bono declares, to make a virtue of necessity and have created the large fleet of little craft which scour the Adriatic with results gia, Pola, and Premuda can testify These deeds, which confirm the traditional bravery of the Italian sailors, are still too little known in all their particulars for it to be possible to apreciate the greatness of the efforts BOWLING GREEN STORAGE which have cost so much in preparation and accomplishment. The day will come, however, Admiral Del Bono affirms, when it will be known what enormous difficulties have been overme in making good, in a short time, the great deficiencies revealed by the war. First of all in creating fresh material in which the idea of great of two or more children under 14 the results accomplished by incredibly weekly increase will be 4s. 6d.; for small means had to be carried out, motherless children under 14, mainand secondly the employment of these tained in a home, the rate for the new methods in operations carried first child is to be increased by 3s. a on, from a shore which could not be week, and for second and subsequent

filis Harcourt.....Billie Carleton
rry Jackson.....Randle Ayrton .Randle Ayrton

LONDON, England-"The Freedom of the Seas" was received with almost apturous applause; one wondered a little why. For though Mr. Hackett's farcical-melodrama abounds with jokes, and is exciting toward the finish, there seemed hardly sufficient stuff in it to justify so much noise. But audiences on first-nights are things apart, and the tumult of their approbation has become a habit.

Mr. Dennis Eadie, who is George Smith, has to be a rather foolish, diffident young clerk. He falls in love with his employer's daughter, and gets We then see him as a naval lieutenant in charge of a tramp steamer commanded by a captain with a talent for misquoting Scripture. The eamer, as one might expect, has picked up from a torpedoed vessel Smith's late employer and the young lady of his affections, and she has, moreover, on board a German agent. Through Smith's remarkable alertness in deciphering a code the machinations of the villain are foiled, Smith proving himself a strong man in the eyes of the heroine.

Into the midst of the most thrilling situation the author introduces comic relief. This is at times a little disconcerting, but the play being anything but a serious piece of work, nobody appeared to mind. There is, lowever, one genuine artistic success in the play, and that is Mr. Hackett's captain of the tramp steamer and Mr. Valentine's interpretation of him. Mr. Valentine, who is one of our best character actors, is too often con-demned to play "heavy fathers," and t was good to see him in a part worthy of his talent.

As Smith, Mr. Eadie gets his effects in the way one expects of him, and with his usual ease. Mr. Holman Clark does all he can in his usual manner with a pompous old gentleman. And Miss Marion Lorne, after Mr. Valentine, was the most popular figure in piece. With perhaps one excepthe acting throughout was as good as the Haymarket usually gets.

The Citizen Army

In the early days of the present war there was no phrase of contempt more frequently on the lips of the critics of the United Kingdom in Germany than that of England's "mercenary army." The Germans outside the United Kingdom were perhaps rather more cautious in their employment of the phrase. And this because living, as a vast majority did, in the United States, they were aware that the armies of the United Kingdom and the United States were recruited on a similar basis, and that what was intended to be an insult flung at the one would be an insult to the other also. What the "mercenary army," to which the Germans referred, actually meant was an army not of conscripts but of volunteers. An army raised, that is to say, not by compulsion but by freedom of contract. The fact was that for three and a half centuries England had adhered to the objection she formed in the days of the Commonwealth to being dominated by a military force. The England of the Restoration became the England of the Restoration largely because the Commonwealth had proved that it was possible to govern the country by an army as arbitrarily as Charles Stewart had governed by divine right. It is perfectly true that the government of Cromwell was democratic in comparison with that of "the man Charles Stewart," but it was impossible to deny that it was a democratic government founded on an extremely oligarchic basis, and a democratic government kept in power largely by the sword.

When, consequently, the Restoration came, England with one voice determined that the army of the Commonwealth should not be perpetuated. The army of the Commonwealth was disbanded, and it was only little by little that Charles II was able to establish the foundations of that tiny standing army, which in the intervening centuries, has carried the Union Jack round the world. Even then neither Charles nor his successor, James, dared to appeal to Parliament to pass a Mutiny Bill. The Tories, who had been crushed by the Cromwellian army, were even more violent in their opposition to the idea than the Whigs, whose leaders were committed to a man to the statement that the conception of English polity could never succeed in the same country with a standing army. It took the threat of Louis XIV that he would re-establish the Stewarts in England to convert the country, and to pass the first Mutiny Act through Parliament. But though that act was passed in the year 1689 no British statesman, of any party whatever, has ever dared to advocate in practice the institution of conscription.

The ideal of England, in this respect, was naturally treasured by those Englishmen who came to America to establish a broader condition of democratic government than had ever been attempted in the Mother country. And so it came about that, until the year of Armageddon, the Anglo-Saxon race, on both sides of the Atlantic, had rejoiced in and gloried in what conscripted Germany was pleased to describe as a "mercenary army." Not even Armageddon itself, however, has sufficed to shake the Anglo-Saxon hatred of enforced military service. The huge armies which England has put into the field, armies of millions upon millions of men, have not been recruited on the continental idea of conscription. They have been recruited on the system, subsequently adopted in the United States, of compulsory service, in a terrific emergency, for the duration of a war. Thus the professional soldier, except as a unit in a huge military police force, is no nearer dominating the United Kingdom or the United States today than he has been in the past. The ideal which gives a German officer the right to cut down a civilian in the streets, in the time of peace, even the ideal which takes every French boy into the service of the republic, when he reaches a certain age, remains repugnant to the ideals of that great empire and that great republic which have sprung from one common stock.

The armies of the United Kingdom and the United States today are recruited for a special emergency with citizen soldiers, with soldiers, that is to say, who will not simply return to civilian employment at the end of the war, but who will return to it as civilians and not as soldiers. The German, and even the Frenchman, when the war comes to an end, will return to civil life, but he will return to it as a soldier permitted to resume his work in his shop or office; but nevertheless, as a soldier liable to be called back to the ranks at the pronouncement of those fateful words, war mobilization. In the United Kingdom and in the United States, it will be different. Should the horrors of war again demand the presence of the citizen in the army, it will again require an act of Parliament or Congress to call him up for the temporary purpose for which he is needed. The difference is, of course, immense. It is the difference between a citizen army and a nation under arms. The citizen army has its foundations deep down in the train-bands of Fairfax, in which Bunyan shouldered a pike, and in the archers of Crécy and Agincourt, who came from the English woodlands and towns, in those days before the phrase standing army had ever been heard in the British Isles, and a man could only be called up to serve the country in the hour of the country's need. The nation under arms has a different genesis altogether. It is to be found in those huge standing armies with which the great powers of Europe battled against each other for years. It is to be found in the pikemen of Alva, in the mousquetaires of the Louises, and in the halberdiers of the Kaisers. If the liberties of England prospered and throve, and prospered and throve so successfully that they gave birth to the ships of the Pilgrims and the Puritan fathers, it was not because they were stayed on the tremendous standing armies of a Bourbon or a Hapsburg, but because they were stayed on that love of liberty, which makes liberty itself worth fighting for.

This, then, is the genesis of the great army which the United States of America is about to raise under its new draft law. Its genius, which dates back to the days when Alfred made his famous avowal of faith that the Danes should not put their fetters upon England, or earlier still, to that pathetic effort of Boadicea's naked warriors to fight the steel-clad cohorts of pagan Rome, could hardly have been expressed better than in those concluding words of the address, delivered by Mr. Wilson to the joint session of the two houses of Congress, on the second of April, 1917:—

"To such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured.

"God helping her, she can do no other."

Sir Robert Borden's Message

Few statesmen of the present day possess to a greater degree the ability to say the right thing, at the right time, in the right way, than Sir Robert Borden, the Prime Minister of Canada. This ability has, indeed, been uniformly characteristic of his career, but especially during that momentous part of it comprised in the last four years. It has its cause, simply enough, in the fact that Sir Robert, subordinating all considerations of party, determined from the first to have before him no standard of action but the simple, though remorseless one, of the highest good, not only of his own country, but of all humanity. The man who, in the face of the most bitter opposition, even from his own friends, strove untiringly to achieve union government at home; who was never discouraged in the effort, but, as soon as those he would serve blocked one channel, sought for another; the man who saw the justice of conscription and the imperious necessity for prohibition, and placed them both on the statute book, in spite of the storm which these proposals roused in many quarters; the man who has thus thought what was right and done what was right finds no difficulty in recognizing the right time to say the right thing, or to say it in the

And so when Sir Robert Borden landed at New York, last Friday, after a momentous visit to Europe, he placed his finger unerringly on the two great needs of the hour, and directed men's thoughts to them in that forcible way which is all his own. "I firmly believe," he said, speaking of Great Britain and the United States, "that the future peace of the world rests largely, and indeed chiefly, upon the unity of purpose and action between these two democracies." And again, speaking of Germany, and the necessity for a complete overthrow of German militarism, he said, "It may be a hard lesson, but they cannot be saved from themselves unless they are compelled to learn it. Let no selfish purpose or divergence of interest impede united action to this end."

In other words, Sir Robert Borden, fresh from the councils of the Allies and from intimate touch with the men who, on the battlefields of western Europe, are defending the cause of civilization against the attacks of the "assassin state," pleads for unity of purpose in prosecuting the war to the uttermost, and unshaken unity of determination never to acquiesce in anything less than complete victory. It is characteristic of the man that he should hold out, as the only reason worth considering for both pleas, not the immediate safety of Great Britain and the United States, but the future peace of the world, and the regeneration of Germany herself. "The devils by whom German militarists are possessed," he says, "must be cast out, the spell with which they have bound the German people must be broken. Until then, Germany cannot become regenerate.'

Sir Robert Borden recognizes to the full the real meaning of the rising tide of the suggestion of "peace by compromise." His vision does not stop at the pacificist-Socialist or the Bolshevik, but seeks out the real source of the suggestions which those people so fondly regard as the outcome of their own innermost thoughts and the fruits of their own humanitarian statesmanship. He does not stop to kick the stone, but seeks the man who threw it. He does not stop to denounce the misguided Socialist and pacificist, but simply takes away the disguise, and enables the whole world to see what it is that is hurling those people across the path of a righteous victory. The Canadian Premier has never fallen into the error of underestimating the resources of the enemy, but he recognizes that these resources depend for their power largely upon the fact that they are not seen as enemy resources. He strips off the disguise. Of the Stockholmite, the pacificist-Socialist, the Bolshevik, and all others who favor compromise, he says, simply, "See, here is Germany and, again, Germany and, once again, Germany."

Danegeld

Although it has been the policy of the Spanish Government, for some time past, in regard to Morocco, to prevent any news of conditions in the Riff finding a place in the Spanish press, it has been impossible to prevent news as to the true state of affairs in the Spanish zone from leaking out- For a considerable time, Spain has been something more than uneasy about these affairs. Again and again confidence has been restored by the announcement of some wonderful settlement and the imminent withdrawal of Spanish troops, but these promises, somehow, have never materialized. They have, indeed, been almost invariably followed, after a long and exasperating silence, by news going to show that affairs had been progressing backward, and that the longpromised day of pacification, let alone development, was further off than ever.

Now the allied world at times like the present, might well be excused if it had no mind to concern itself with Spain and her policy in Morocco. The Spanish attitude during the last few years, especially during the last few months, has not been, to say the least of it, impressive, but the Allies cannot afford to neglect the Spanish zone in Morocco. Ever since the beginning of the war, it has been a kind of rallying ground for German propaganda in Spain, and for the hatching of plots against French authority in the neighboring territory; whilst, every month that passes, those promoting these enterprises are less and less at pains to conceal their actions or to cover their tracks

Recently, matters have reached a point that Spain has virtually surrendered her sovereign authority and has resorted to that last refuge of the politically destitute, namely, buying off her enemies. For nearly a year, indeed, Spanish authority in the Riff has been entirely at the mercy of the notorious brigand Raisuli, to whom Spain has been paying the handsome bribe of 100,000 pesetas a month in order to make sure that Raisuli's influence with the unruly elements of the country should be cast on the side of the Spanish authorities. The payment of Danegeld, however, never has succeeded, from the days of the Saxon king Ethelred the Unready, and long before his day, down to the present time. As Ethelred found out, the Danes came back for more, and the more they were paid the more surely did they return. So it is with Raisuli. With a fine contempt for all agreements, he was found, some time ago, openly plotting with Germany, receiving large sums in German gold to further German interests, and in quite open correspondence with the German consul at Tetuan. Spain was literally forced to make some show of taking action, and the action she took was to stop payment to Raisuli until he should change his ways. Raisuli, however, has evidently no intention of submitting to any such indignity, and his latest word to Spain is that if she does not pay up his arrears, he will make war on her. At the same time he intimates his intention of getting himself appointed Grand Vizier of Tetuan. There the matter rests at the present time. It is a sorry picture, as far as Spain is concerned, of political ineptitude.

Colonel's Nelson's Philosophy

Two things of recent occurrence have recalled to memory William Rockhill Nelson. First of these was the conspicuous general publication of certain alleged facts concerning the disappearance of public moneys in Vermont; second was an appreciation in this newspaper of the beautiful Boston seaside resort, Magnolia, where President Wilson had just concluded a few days' vacation. Colonel Nelson, as he was called by his friends, or Colonel "Bill" Nelson, by his intimates, or "Uncle Bill" Nelson, by those who were very close to him indeed, had for years a charming summer home overlooking Magnolia Cove and almost directly opposite the Jefferson Coolidge mansion, occupied by the presidential party on this visit. His appearance annually had come to be looked for with great pleasure by regular residents and summer colonists, for he brought with him out of the West a genial, democratic atmosphere, and all the days, weeks, and months of his yearly pilgrimages on the shore were marked by kindly words and deeds.

Colonel Nelson came from Kansas City, where he owned two newspapers, The Star and The Times. The first he practically founded; the second he purchased and rebuilt. The properties came to be very profitable, yielding him a large income. Out of his private means he founded the Western Gallery of Art in Kansas City, and it may as well be said here that his entire fortune will eventually go to the advancement of culture in the city in which it was made.

He had not always been a newspaperman. As a contractor he had accumulated something like $200,000, which, as an investor in Georgia cotton growing he had lost. In 1876, although a comparatively young man, he was given command of the Samuel J. Tilden campaign in Indiana. He first tried his hand at journalism in Fort Wayne of that State, but decided that a field farther west would be for him more promising. His judgment in this was sound, as it was in many other respects, and within a few years he began to wield a powerful influence in Missouri, Kansas, and adjoining states. Always an independent, but never a neutral, Colonel "Bill" Nelson's weight, thrown to either side in any local or general contest, political or economic, went far toward bringing about a quick decision.

He was offered many positions of prominence, and stepping-stones to positions, but he would have none of them, preferring to be free from all obligations; nevertheless, he was taken into numerous counsels where his philosophical reasoning was highly esteemed. This leads to the point of present interest. He was one of the few who could see in betrayals of public trust, so-called, culpability rather on the part of the public than on the part of the individual offender, toward whom the public happened for the moment to be pointing the finger of accusation, condemnation, and scorn. If public morals were loose, according to Colonel Nelson, that was the fault of the public, and the consequences should be charged to and accepted by the public. In such cases as that in Vermont. instead of joining in the hue-and-cry against the individual who was short in his accounts, he inveighed against the looseness of the system which made the shortage

The time came when the question of responsibility in such circumstances was brought home to him. He was one of several directors of an enterprise in which a large amount of money was handled. In one of the branch agencies of this concern a young cashier became known to his associates as a "free spender." The young man explained his ability to "let money fly" by saying that he received large remittances from home. His extravagances were notorious. Suddenly he was found to be six or seven thousand dollars short. The managing officials took speedy action. They sought to recover the loss from the young man's father. Already shamed and grieved beyond expression, the father, a struggling farmer, summoned to appear before the directors on a certain day, laid down $2000, all in the world he could raise, upon the table. He was questioned and cross-questioned by certain of the directors. He was told that prosecution must go on unless the shortage was entirely made good. There was a great deal of moralizing and sermonizing. The young man's character, to the mortification of his father, was roughly handled. Colonel "Bill" Nelson was there, listening to it all, but saying nothing, up to the point where there was a move to take the father's $2000.

Then he spoke. "No, gentlemen," he said. "We will not take this man's money. He owes us nothing. He has not wronged us; we have grossly wronged him. We have made a thief and a fugitive out of his son. It was our business to see that the young man was protected while in our employment. Instead of protecting, we laid snares for him. We had no business to allow him the liberties he enjoyed in handling funds intrusted to our safe-keeping. We paved the way for his fall; we have irretrievably injured him, and now we talk of penalizing his father, when, as a matter of justice, we should be making him reparation. Let us hand this money back to him. That is the least we can do, and then let us go down into our own pockets, personally make the loss good, and set to work to reform our methods so that we may injure no more sons and fathers.'

Colonel Nelson had his way. And there have since been no defalcations in that corporation.

Notes and Comments

A PECULIAR expression has arisen in Vancouver. If one lives in that Canadian Pacific port, and has not heard the term "jaywalker," then he or she can claim a particular merit as a law-abiding citizen. To be a "jaywalker" is to be a person who, when crossing a street, does so at some point other than a street intersection, and thereby ignores the by-law which, in his defense let it be said, has fallen into what a politician once termed "innocuous desuetude." It used to be said in the United States, of anyone who crossed a street at a point other than the intersections, that he thereby proclaimed himself to be a foreigner.

At the review of the Girl Guides held in London by Queen Mary, the Brownies called particularly for her smiling appreciation. The Girl Guides are the feminine Boy Scouts of Britain and the Brownies are Girl Guides in embryo, children who have not yet reached the age of ten. Boys, in the Boy Scout movement, of eight or nine are known as Wolf Cubs. They have a very fine spirit, as the conversation which was overheard on one air raid evening testifies. It was dark and the speakers could not be distinguished, but the voices sounded young and somewhat excited. There were tones both of remonstrance and of protest. Finally the protesting voice, that evidently of quite a small boy, said: "No, I am going, it's my duty to go." Again the remonstrating voice interrupted; but the small boy insisted: "I am a Wolf Cub and it's my duty." That seemed to clinch the matter, and two pairs of feet were heard scurrying off to their allotted posts.

THE Paris Symphony Orchestra, it is announced, is to give fifty concerts in leading American cities, beginning next October. Perhaps there are music lovers in the United States to whom music is the same whether it is produced by an enemy or a friend, but it is fair to presume that the great majority feel otherwise about it. It has not been possible for Americans generally, during the last year or so, to extract real satisfaction from a symphony orchestra concert while keeping one suspicious eye on the leader and another on the bass viol player, and at the same time wondering whether the clarinetist and the first cornetist were not exchanging signals while pretending to be rapt in the ecstasies of German melody.

Well-kept public parks, with their trees, shrubs, and flowers, give great delight to the people. Thousands flock to these places in spring, summer, and fall, and enjoy their shade, their blossoms, their picturesque views, and the freedom they afford. Why not add to their attractions by making them educational? In a majority of cases Latin names, if any, are attached to trees and plants. This is as it should be, but why not also give the common names? Many flowers are not labeled at all. Park frequenters see them and admire them, but gain no specific knowledge of them. The parks are for the masses, and park commissioners would perform a further valuable service by placing on trees, plants, and all the other exhibits, outdoors and indoors, the names by which they are generally known.

There are some curious coincidences in the strong likeness which has been noticed to exist between celebrities belonging to different ages. For instance, in Charles MacFarlane's "Reminiscences of a Literary Life" he describes how, meeting Shelley in the Royal Bourbon Museum at Naples, he showed him a statue of Agrippina, the mother of Nero. "I told him," he says, "that the Bonaparte family considered this the very image of their mother. When Madame Mère was in Naples, her daughter, Queen Caroline, induced her to sit by the statue, and made a large party remark on the striking resemblance." A similar coincidence between two great men of the same age was the likeness between Motley, the historian of "The Rise of the Dutch Republic," and Byron. It was so marked as to be described by the poet's wife as "most wonderful."

THE landing of the allied troops on the Murman Coast would have been a subject of supreme interest to Richard Hakluyt, for in his day the coasts to the north of Norway were often visited by the seamen adventurers in their endeavors to find a northeast passage to China. In May, 1553, Sir Hugh Willoughby, "a goodly gentleman," got as far as the entrance of the White Sea and eventually landed at a suitable place on the Murman Coast. Hakluyt says he was accompanied by "Pilots, Maisters, Merchants and Mariners" and had three ships "well furnished, to wit, The Bona Sperança, the Edward Bonaventure and the Confidentia." Richard Chancellor was the pilot of the Bonaventure, which ship got separated from the other two and anchored on the shores of the White Sea where Archangel now stands. From there Chancellor traveled to Moscow and returning to his ship eventually got home to London. Hakluyt in these days is particularly worth reading again on these early relations and communications with Russia, and on the daring and enterprise of the seadogs of his century.
